

Developing a Place-Based Education Project

List the stakeholders in your community (businesses, municipal boards, ngo's, federal and state agencies, churches, civic organizations, schools, clubs, etc). Be specific. For each, take a stab at naming their principal area/s of concern (quality after school programs, maintaining the fishery, etc), then note some possible concrete opportunities for place-based education partnerships.

Project Name:
Brief Synopsis:
How will this project support your organization's mission and program goals?
How will this project support your management, administration, public relations or other goals?
What are the instructional elements of this project?
What are the service elements?
How will it benefit the local community and/or environment?
What different academic or professional disciplines will your project draw from?
If age appropriate, how will this project link to or bridge to regional and global issues?

Project Name:
Who within your organization will work with you on this project? Who will take the lead?
Who might be your partners? How will you approach them?
Would this project benefit from a community steering committee and if so who might serve on it?
What resources do you need to implement this project? Where can you get them?
What is your timeline for implementing the project? Name several benchmarks.
What will be your first step? Who will do it?
How will you know if you are succeeding? What indicators will you use for assessment?
What do you anticipate your principal obstacles will be in initiating and implementing this project?	